PAY DAY FOR CITY FIREMEN AND COPS DELAYED A MONTH

"No pay until the middle of January."

That is the encouraging Christmas news city firemen and police have received from City Auditor W.
H. Williams.

The city safety fund from which the salaries of the firemen and police are paid is empty. No relief for the men is in sight until after the collection of taxes in January, which begins
January 2.

For the past several months money has been transferred from the general fund to pay the salaries, but even this cannot now be done, according to city officials.

The cutting of the city's share of taxes by the budget committee is being blamed for the financial condition of the city now. There has been no money in the safety or street fund for some time, the general fund, supplied by money forthcoming from fines and license assessments, supporting those two.

The fact that the budget commission which makes the allowances for both the city and county is composed entirely of county officials is a sore spot with the city officials and the cause of considerable agitation.

TIVERTON FARMERS INSTITUTE CLOSES

The Tiverton Farmers' Institute
closed Friday afternoon at Tiverton, conceded a huge success in every respect by the attendance at the five sessions, Thursday and Friday.

Three successful sessions were held Thursday. Two sessions were held Friday. The closing session will be held this evening, when the Tiverton school pupils will give the program.

As a result of the institute, it was the aim of the members Friday to establish co-operative livestock shipping.
It is also planned to hold neighborhood demonstrations in the making of inexpensive dress forms.

The speakers for the occasion were Bertha Edmonds, Clinton-co., H. E.
Shaver, Gallia-co.; Prof. B. F. Coggins, Prof. Lloyd Williamson, Irwin Porteus Livestock shipping manager and G. C. Musgrove, county agent.

Bad roads and inclement weather
limited the attendance both days.

KENTUCKY GOVERNOR PRAISES WATTERSON

FRANKFORT, Ky., Dec. 23.—"Henry Watterson served his state and his country," declared Gov. Edwin P.
Morrow, Republican, in a statement issued late last night, supplementing his brief comment early in the morning.

His statement in full is as follows:
"With all of his great mental courage which never knew surrender, Henry Watterson served his state and his country. He loved Kentucky and his trenchant pen and silver tongue were at their best when he wrote or spoke of the commonwealth.

"While many did not agree with his political policies, no man ever challenged the integrity of his opinions and he was universally beloved because of his qualities of head and heart.

"The great American, the great Kentuckian, the last of the journalists who wielded tremendous influences has passed away. There is no one left to use the pen that fell from his fingers.

Down in the corn fields of the blue grass in the poony royal, in the heart of the throbbing city and in the high stretches of the mountains, there is sorrow today because "Marao Henry" has left his "Old Kentucky home."

ELK NEWSIES ARE READY TO FLASH SPECIAL EDITION EARLY SATURDAY

Expect To Clear $1,000 To Be Expended For Christmas Cheer

HEINKE IS CHIEF

"Big News" E. W. Heinke and his faithful staff of Elk newspaper salesmen will take to the streets early Saturday morning with supplies of the Elk special charity edition of the Tribune & Times-Age with the intention of collecting $1,000 or more from the sale of the papers.

At least a thousand dollars must be taken in, and for this reason the sky
only will be the limit on the price accepted for a single copy of the paper.

Because of the great number of people in the city who are in discouraging financial circumstances, the baskets to be distributed by the Elks will be confined to the families who are actually starving.

Members of the committee in charge of the task of investigating the circumstances of the families reported, give assurances that there are many who are living on one meal a day, and a very scanty one at that.

An effort will also be made to bring the spirit of Santa Claus to the children of such families by means of a few toys, altho it is feared that all of the money collected will be needed to buy bare necessities.

All of the factories in the city will be canvassed by the Elk salesmen.
The upper plant of the American Art Works will be handled by D. E.
Thaxton, Thomas Athey and George Moot.

The lower plant will be in charge of Harold Wilcox, William Wendi and Brooks Johnson.

At the Coshocton Glove Co will be
R. S. Curtis.
Timmons Glove Co., Mark Appleby.
Keagy & Lear Machine Co., Charles Dawson.

SOVIETS IN SESSION

Riga, Dec. 23.—War clouds are again gathering in eastern Europe.
There is a fear Russia may become embroiled with half a dozen nations as a result of the dispute between Moscow and Finland over Karelia.

Russia accuses the Finns of seizing Russian territory and threatening the occupation of the Murmansk railroad.
Finland has appealed to the league of nations.

Russia has already announced that she regards Finland's appeal to the league as a hostile act.

The Premier of, Lettvia says that Finland appealed to the league in the interests of peace and has no desire to go to war.

M. Hanetsky, the Soviet ambassador, declares, on the other hand, that Finland has brought war nearer by her actions.

Hanetsky will leave Riga for Moscow late today, to discuss the Kare-lian situation with George Tchitch-erin, commissar for foreign affairs.

Whether or not Russia goes to war will be decided by the all-Russian congress of Soviets scheduled to open in Moscow today.

If Russia goes to war it is most probable Finland will be supported by Poland, Rumania, some of the Baltic states and other powers fronting the Russian border.

The council of the league of nations will meet at Geneva early in January.

'GET RIGHT WITH GOD' IS GREETING OF EVANGELIST BILLY SUNDAY TO PEOPLE OF AMERICA AND THE WORLD AT LARGE

DENNISON BASEBALL PLAYER A SUICIDE

Baseball fans and friends of this city were grieved Friday when they learned that John Lindsey, aged 28 of Uhrichsville and a member of the H. A. C. baseball team, had committed suicide by shooting following the death of his three-year-old son,
Richard, who died from burns.

The double tragedy occurred Wednesday afternoon at the Lindsey home on East Bank-st. Worry over the death of his child was responsible for Lindsey taking his own life.
He shot himself thru the heart with a 32-calibre revolver.

His son had sustained fatal injuries
Wednesday morning when his clothing became ignited in some unknown manner during the absence of his mother. The father was called home from work, on learning of what had happened to his son.

Seven times during the day the father said, "If Dickie dies I'll die too."

When the child died at 3:30 o'clock
Wednesday afternoon the father arose from the couch on which the body lay in a downstairs room, said goodbye to his wife and mother, went upstairs, threw himself on the bed and committed suicide.

Lindsey was an outfielder on the
P. H. A. C. team and has played ball in this city.

'HARD-BOILED' IN MEXICAN ARMY

Says Lieutenant Smith Has Crossed Rio Grande To Join Kindred Spirits

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—Lieutenant Frank H. ("Hard-Boiled") Smith, whose alleged brutal treatment of American expeditionary force prisoners at Prison Farm No. 2 at Chelles, France, finally landed him in military prison at Ft. Jay, Governor's Island, N. Y., for a short term, now is a colonel in President Alvaro Obregon's army in Mexico according to an El Paso dispatch to the Stars and Stripes.
Following this information word reached New York today that Smith had dropped out of sight in the country and that army officials, to whom he was required to report during his parole from prison, have had no trace of him for many months.

Inquiry developed the fact that Smith was paroled from Ft. Jay before the expiration of his sentence.
March 20, 1921, four months before the end of the 18 months' term to which he had been sentenced, he was permitted to go to his home in Plainville, Ohio. No mention of parole was made by the war department
however, until September, 30, 1921,
when it was announced that Smith finally had been released from parole the preceding July 28.

One of the reasons intimated by the war department for Smith's parole was the discontinuance of the disciplinary barracks at Ft. Jay, in which the prisoner had been confined. The long-term prisoners were transferred to Ft. Leavenworth, Kan.
it was announced, and Smith was directed to report to that post regularly for four months after his release from prison here.

CAN'T DEPEND ON PROMISES IN WAR TIME

Belief Expressed Fumes Are Less Objectionable Than Shell Fire

ITALY HOLDS OUT

Protection Of Noncombat-
tant Population Is Desired
By All Powers

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—The place of poison gas as a weapon of war is permanent it was said today by American officials and experts.

Despite any ban which may be placed on gas, there is nothing which will absolutely prevent a recurrence of its use in war, military experts declared. To rely on such a ban as a protection would be to invite a tragedy such as the second battle of Ypres, when the Canadian and French troops in the line were deluged in gas for the first time in war.

Regardless of any ban on the use of gas, one high official of the conference pointed out, troops will never in future be safe from disaster without the newest type of gas mask. In taking this stand, American representatives openly express every desire to see gas restricted and if possible, eliminated, but they hold that this latter is practically impossible.

Accordingly what American representatives desire is to see the use of gas in war hedged about so as to protect every non-combatant and town but to leave armies free to use it as a legitimate weapon. Aside from civilian opinion, military experts as an abstract proposition regard gas as far more humane than shell fire.

The general attitude of America is backed by Great Britain and, it is understood, by the French also. This is contrary to the representations made by the Italian delegation, which placed American representatives as standing alone for the retention of this weapon.

The use of gases in war was for-bidden by the Hague agreement of which Germany was a signer, and despite this prohibition, every nation in the war finally resorted to it. And at present the chemical experts of many countries are experimenting in efforts to develop even more terrible forms of lethal warfare than was guessed at in the last year.

Jacob Kanuckie, of Spring Mountain, was in this place on business, last Monday.

Several very prominent speakers have been secured for the Independent Farmers Institute for December 22-23, at Tiverton.

The committee having in charge the church Christmas tree and program, have selected Xmas evening, December 24, when said program shall be rendered, at the Logan Run church. Rev. S. V. Rohrbach, of Uniontown, will be present.

C. E. Day, merchant, of this place for the past fourteen years has wholly disposed of his stock of goods, business block and dwelling, and will embark in the same business at Glenmont. He purchased what is known as the Gray General Merchandise Store at that point. He took possession of the store on last Monday morning and will move his family there in the very near future.

John F. Strouse, six weeks ago, was bitten in the hand by an opossum. Very little attention was given to the incident at the time. A few days later his hand and arm became swollen and continued to swell for several weeks. Before his attending physician was able to render aid his hand, arm and shoulder were swollen to double their normal size. He suffered great pains for nearly two weeks, blood poison was much in evidence, but he is now that out of danger.

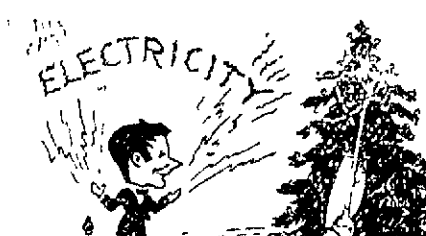

"Pussyfoot" Is Back From India

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—William E. "Pussyfoot" Johnson, crusading American prohibitionist, returns from India on the Adriatic today, at a time when enforcement agents are striving to make New York's New Year's eve the driest in history.

Mr. Johnson, who lost an eye in a London riot, has been preaching the doctrine of abstinence for the Indians for four months, as a representative of the Anti-Saloon League.

TO STOP COUGHING AT NIGHT

When anyone is suffering from a bronchial affliction or has a cough that lingers on and grows worse at night, the loss of sleep tends to weaken the sufferer and grows more serious the longer it is neglected. Mrs. M. Suter, 647 Longbrook Ave., Stratford, Conn., writes: "Poley's Honey and Tar has given me great relief from a severe attack of bronchitis. No medicine stands higher throughout the nation as a family remedy for colds, coughs and croup."

"I understand now why so many people praise Tanlac as I have tried it myself and it certainly is a wonderful medicine," said Mrs. Della Kunze, 856 Lull Ave., Chicago, valued employee of the Boston Department Store.

"I eat with so much zest and enjoyment now that my family really joke me about it. A short time ago, however, I had absolutely no appetite and was eating so little that I was losing weight and strength every day and I suffered so much from indigestion and nervousness that I was on the brink of a breakdown."

"There are absolutely no words that can express my delight at the remarkable and immediate results I obtained from Tanlac. It benefited me in every way. Instead of being depressed and melancholy and tired and worn out I am full of life and energy and cheerful and happy all the time. I've gained twelve pounds in weight, too."

Tanlac is sold in Coshocton by Siegrist & Williams and leading druggists everywhere.

Mr. Weeks' Next War

WITH "the next war" appearing to be far in the future, Secretary Weeks felt himself at liberty at the second annual reunion of the War Industries Board on Saturday to make a radical suggestion concerning it. "I would conscript every person in the United States from eighteen to sixty years old," he is quoted as saying, "and would say, 'You are to do this and so, because you can do that better than anything else. You can fight or you can serve in some other capacity, a capacity for which you are best suited.' This recourse, he thought, would keep down prices and wages and prevent profiteering. Obviously it would, if rigorously applied.

In fact, the idea is an excellent illustration of a proposal which has passed thru a stage of disreputability and finally gets to good society. Certain innovators suggested while the war was in progress that capital as well as men be drafted. They reasoned that whereas some men were best at fighting, others would do well at paying taxes, and that both should be encouraged to do what they could best do to the extent of their resources. If one shed his blood lavishly the other should shed his money lavishly. They argued, also, against the "cost plus" system and other devices by which stay-at-homes were bribed at a great price to do considerably less than volunteers and drafted men did for $30 a month.

There was but one answer, and it was made; people who proposed such drastic measures were pro-German. Mr. Weeks was not among them at the time, but some of them will be glad that he has at last, as they view it, seen the light. And Mr. Weeks is probably a good prophet. The next war will be nowhere near so easy on the well-to-do stay-at-homes, or on any sort of stay-at-homes, as the last one was.

A Challenge To Radicals

IN the current issue of The World Tomorrow is carried a challenge to those radicals who believe that before there can be any real forward movement the world must be plunged into complete chaos.

This writer declares that many radicals who "see clearly the impossibility of securing peace on the old imperialistic basis are very cynical about the Washington conference. We agree with them that the root of war is economic. But some extreme radicals are better at pointing out present dangers than at suggesting the way out.

"There is an argument which runs on this wise: New world war is sooner or later inevitable. Radicals could only avert it by a successful revolution, and such a revolution they will not have strength enough to carry out until after imperialistic war has run a considerable course. They need not for that reason despair. Let them, runs the argument, as far as possible "hibernate" during the tremendous struggle of rival imperialisms. The end of that struggle will be chaos such as the world war produced in Russia. Then, as the Bolsheviks took advantage of the Russian situation and out of chaos won an opportunity to re-build society, let the Communists of the future take advantage of new and worse chaos to build the new world. To accomplish this task they will need to be disciplined, intelligent, and free from sentimental qualms as to the use of whatever force may be necessary.

"Such theorists call themselves realists. Are they not rather wildly romantic? If half of what the experts prophesy about the deadliness of the next war be true, there will be nothing left on which to re-build a Communist society. A few miserable survivors there may be who will crawl out of dugouts in the earth to which they have fled for protection. They will find universal destruction. Even fields will have been rendered infertile for long periods of years. What were once magnificent cities will be human graveyards. Biologically the race will have been weakened past calculation. Spiritually the experience thru which men will have passed will have unfitted them for their high tasks as rebuilders.

"Today the people of Europe have been almost incapacitated to work out their own salvation as a consequence of the destructive passions unloosed by war. If modern Russia demonstrates what a determined group of Communists, led by a genius like Lenin, can accomplish, it also demonstrates the limits to such accomplishment. The Bolshevik dictatorship by its own confession has not established Communism. It suffers from famine and misery. To say this is not to indict the Communists so much as the conditions they had to face. Of the ultimate future of Russia we have high hopes. But it must be remembered that not even Russia's misery and her enormous losses during the war and revolution have been in any wise comparable to the catastrophe and loss of new war and new revolution such as the "realists" predict.

"Is not the optimism of men who in the face of such catastrophe can see hope for the future more admirable than judgment? We agree with them that the one chance for peace is a revolutionary re-organization of society, but unless mankind can discover ways of securing this revolution peacefully, or at least without such a holocaust of violence as our realists predict, there is no hope save in the slow re-emergence of the human race thru new dark ages. The present-day challenge to radicals is not to try to take advantage of catastrophe, but to prevent it."

In one of the most popular plays in New York Allan Pollack is the star. He was the young actor who quit his job when war was declared and came back shot thru the neck and stomach and stabbed in the chest. Most of the time he is in constant pain and yet he says that when he is playing he is absolutely free from pain. And so he plays—giving a most delightful performance. He has refused to permit his press agents to exploit him as a hero. The truth is that he should have been a tiger of adventure in real life but mysterious chance made him an actor. He, like Cellini, should have had priceless jewels to play with and bombs to fling, to relieve the rich, eager nature that came to him straight from the steaming earth. I saw him the other day, pale and gasping, making his way thru a side street. Altho in his early thirties his hair is silver white and he looks 50.

The average tip to waitresses in the Child's restaurants is 10 cents. One waitress in a lower Broadway link in the chain has saved enough money out of tips in a year's time to buy a house on the West Side. Also she is to marry a man upon whom she waited and he is quite well to do.

They caught a little rat-faced pick-pocket in the Times Square subway station the other day. He had just extracted a hip roll from an unsuspecting bumpkin who was watching the express trains flash by. The dip was nervous from drugs and had a racking cough. "It was my last job," he said. "I wanted to get enough to get to Arizona."

"Suppose you wanted to get well and begin all over again," said a cynical lieutenant. "Yes" was the reply.

"Well what would you do then to make a living?"

"Lift leathers, of course," said the pick-pocket.

There is something engagingly frank about the pick-pockets of the younger set.

WALT MASON

Oh, I have slippers, fancy-sewed, and slippers green and gray, and slipper come to my abode on every Christmas day. The postman toll on lagging feet, for he is old and frail. See him coming down the street with slippers by the bale; as to my door the postman drifts, I shed a dread moan, I often think that Christmas gifts should be for kids alone. I send a gift to my Aunt Jane, and she sends one to me, the gift I send gives her a pain, and she cries "Hully chee!" And she sends me a gaudy pair of slippers she has knit, whereat I sigh and wring my hair—the blamed things do not fit. The little children love the things we send by Santa's mail, they're happy as so many kings—life hasn't made things stale. I hear them shouting in their joy, and love them for their din, in raptures o'er some flashy toy that's made of wood or tin. But when a grownup gets a gift, in Christmas ribbons tied, all wearily he maketh shift to see what is inside. And then we hear his doleful cry, as he upsets the chair. "More slippers!" And already I have foot seven pairs!" The Christmas tree its head uplifts, a pleasant thing to see, now let the children have the gifts—I hope there's none for me!

PEOPLE'S FORUM

COUNTY ROADS

Editor Tribune.
Dear Sir: The conditions of the county roads are deplorable and in a great many instances almost impassable.

With the great amount of rainfall which we have had within the last two months and the constant cutting up of the roads by automobiles, the need of better country and township roads leading onto the main improved roads is felt by the people living back from the improved roads.

A certain per cent of automobile license fee which is returned to the county, is to be distributed to the townships and corporations for road work, is lost to the townships, from failure of automobile owners to put their full address including rural route and the name of their township on their application for license tags.

Automobile owners remember for the good of the township roads when you fill out your application, put on it the township or corporation in which you reside, so that this money may be used on your roads.

Coshocton has profited to your loss by your negligence in this manner.

CONCERNING PRICES

Editor The Tribune

Last Sunday's Edition of your paper was very interesting to me, especially the five column article which appeared in the middle of the front page. The large black-face type heading of the article read as follows:

"PRICES IN COSHOCTON DECREASE 40 PER CENT SINCE WAR, SURVEY OF STORES HERE SHOWS SATURDAY." This article stated that various kinds of merchandise which enter into the cost of living, such as men's suits, hats and overalls, women's suits, gingham dress goods, serges and chamoises, men's and women's shoes, meat, groceries, hardware and furniture, had dropped in price from 25 per cent to as high as 60 per cent.

Your article failed to mention the fact that the products of the farms, which enter so extensively into the cost of living, have dropped in price a greater per cent, perhaps, than any other commodities.

In another column of last Sunday's edition of your paper, the Central Trades and Labor Council appealed to the people of this community to patronize the Barber Shops which display Union Shop Cards. As my shop is only one of a dozen or so which are located in Coshocton and as I could not hope to take care of all the barbering in this city even if it should be offered to me, the loyal union man who prefers to pay twice as much for his hair as charged in my shop will have no difficulty in being a member of one of the Barber Shops which displays the Union Shop Card.

If the Central Trades and Labor Council and the Barber's Union are so well satisfied with wartime prices and are so much opposed to any reduction in the cost of living, why don't they appeal to the people of this

ONE OF THEM MAY BE MAN O' WAR OF TOMORROW

This interesting group of yearlings will some day carry the colors of George D. Widener's stables. They are shown wintering at his farm at Elkins, Pa. No one knew what Man O' War or Morvitch could do at the colt stage. It may be that there is another wonder horse here.

UNCLE DICK WOOTTON, "KEEPER OF THE GATE IN MOUNTAINS"

Richens Lacy Wootton his parents in Virginia named him at his birth in 1810; Young Dick Wootton his companions in Cavan St. Vrain's trading outfit called him in 1836 when he joined them on the Santa Fe trail as a teamster, but as Uncle Dick Wootton, the "keeper of the gate in the mountains," he was best known to every trapper, fur trader and Indian fighter in the West.

Wootton's inexperience made him the butt of many a joke among St. Vrain's veterans, and one incident did not add greatly to his reputation among them. One night when the train had been corralled as usual in a circle, young Wootton was posted as a guard, with orders to fire at any moving object outside the corral. After some hours he saw a form moving about nearby, and promptly opened fire. The traders, awakened by his shot, rushed out, to find that young Dick had killed one of their mules which had wandered out of the corral. Dick soon lived down his blunder, however, by his courage in a fight with a band of Comanches a few days later. Here Wootton killed his first Indian.

Wootton became a trapper and trader, and had many a hard battle with the Indians in his wanderings. He won the undying friendship of the Arapahoes, however, by saving the life of an Arapaho woman who was lost in a blizzard. They called him "Cut Hand," because he had lost two fingers from one hand in a boyhood accident.

During the Mexican war Wootton served as a scout for Col. William Doniphan, and once was asked to carry dispatches back to Santa Fe through a country swarming with hostile Indians and enemy troops. He was offered an escort but refused it, saying he could make it better alone. He accomplished the perilous task, and received the highest praise from Doniphan for his feat.

In his later years Uncle Dick Wootton, as he now was called, settled in Raton pass, on the border line of Colorado and New Mexico.

When the Santa Fe railroad built its line through Raton pass, one of the biggest locomotives was named "Uncle Dick" in honor of Wootton, and the old scout always watched for its appearance and smiled proudly as it thundered to the top of the pass with its heavy load.

Warm in Alaska.

Although less than thirty degrees from the North pole, the climate of south central Alaska is very mild, the temperature seldom registering below zero, says the American Forestry Magazine. The mean annual temperature for Prince William sound is thirty-eight degrees Fahrenheit, and it is warmer during the winter months than at any other point in the world in similar latitude. The temperate climate is due largely to the beneficent influence of the Japan current which sets into the head of the Gulf of Alaska.

Tea Plant an Evergreen.

The tea plant belongs to the same family of evergreens as the camellia, and has small white flowers, slightly fragrant. As a rule the seeds are planted on terraces on gentle hill slopes, but level ground may also be used provided it is kept drained. The shrub is not allowed to attain a height of more than three or four feet. It is ready for picking in its third year, but is at its best from the fifth to the tenth year. The first picking takes place at the end of April, and lasts three or four weeks. There is a second picking in June or July. This work is generally done by girls.

FOURTH DEGREE

Copyright by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.

THERE was but little doubt in the mind of Thomas Byrnes, superintendent of police in New York city, that Louis Hanier had been murdered for the sake of the money that he was carrying with him at the time. The little Frenchman had been the proprietor of a cafe, and, having a fear of the banks of America, had the habit of carrying hundreds of dollars in his wallet until the opportunity presented itself of purchasing an international money order.

One morning he was found dead in the vestibule of his home, a .38 caliber bullet through his heart, and his pocketbook missing.

That was all Byrnes had to work upon, for there were no indications whatever of the persons who had committed the crime. The dispatch with which the matter had been handled, appeared to point to a professional criminal, so Byrnes gave orders that all the pawnshops in New York were to be closely watched, and reports made to him of the pawning of any .38 caliber revolvers.

Investigation of the dozen or more .38's pawned during the week which followed the Hanier shooting, showed that all but one of them had been pledged by persons who very evidently had no connection with the murder. The single exception was one Michael McGloin, whom the pawnbroker in question identified by means of his photograph in the "Rouges" gallery. McGloin's gun had been pawned on the morning after the murder, and, while the police had little difficulty in locating the man himself, there was not a shred of evidence to connect him with the Hanier case, beyond the fact that he had been absent from home on the night of the shooting in the company of four of his boon companions.

Quietly, and without allowing a word of his intentions to leak out, Byrnes rounded up the quintet one at a time, none of them knowing that the others were being arrested. Each of them was lodged in a cell by himself and questioned closely as to his actions and his whereabouts at the time of the murder. In spite of the fact that Byrnes had definite information that the five men had been together, each of them told a different story, and each claimed to have been alone, at a considerable distance from the Hanier house.

"It's no use, inspector," said one of the policemen who had been working on the case about a week after the five men had been picked up, "you can't get a thing out of 'em. They know, all right, but you can't convict any of 'em without a confession—and we've tried everything, including the 'third degree.'"

"Very well," said Byrnes quietly, "we'll have to try the fourth degree."

"Fourth degree? What's that?"

"Just a little way of getting at the truth when a man wants to hold out on you," was Byrnes' answer. "You think there's no doubt that McGloin's the man? Have him brought to this office tomorrow morning, promptly at ten o'clock."

At the time specified, McGloin, sullen and resentful at what he claimed was an illegal detention, walked into the inspector's office, alone. Had he been interested in such details, he might have noted that Byrnes was seated so that he could watch the window of his office which looked out upon a corridor, and also keep an eye upon the occupant of the only chair in the room, hotted to the floor in front of the desk. But McGloin wasn't worrying about such trifles. He was there to demand his release, and he told the inspector so in no measured terms.

"That's all right, McGloin," replied Byrnes, "sit down a minute. I've several things to attend to," and he motioned to the chair, placed so that it too commanded a view of the corridor window. A moment later the office door opened and a man came in. Byrnes, watching the gunman closely, saw that he was barely able to suppress a start—for the visitor was the pawnbroker with whom McGloin had pledged his revolver. Without saying a word, the pawnbroker crossed the room, laid McGloin's gun on the inspector's desk and walked out.

"Next little boy," remarked Byrnes, picking up the revolver. "Ever see it before?"

"Never," growled McGloin.

"I thought not," was the reply. "It's the gun that Hanier, the Frenchman, was shot with. We've finally got a line on that case, after working on it for over a month. Found a man who was a witness of the shooting."

At this moment, by a prearranged signal, one of McGloin's partners was marched past the corridor window. "Yes," continued Byrnes, appearing not to notice the gunman's agitation. "and we've also found a man who was present"—at which the second of the quintet was ushered past the window—"and two others who have confessed their part in the robbery but who claim that the man who fired the shot was . . ."

"Stop it, for God's sake, chier!" cried the half-crazed man in the chair, his nerves shattered by the solitary confinement and the marshalling of evidence under his very eyes. "Stop it! I didn't mean to do it, but—I shot him!"

"Score one for the 'fourth degree,'" mused Byrnes.

Duration of Thunder.

The chief factor in the prolongation of a peal of thunder is the difference of time required for the sound to travel to the observer from different points along the path of discharge, which may be a mile, or perhaps several miles, in length. Under some conditions reflections of the sound from clouds, hills, etc., further prolongs the peal.

Can't Be Done

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—A split between the American experts and those of other nations over the question of gas in warfare—with America standing out alone against its abolition—was disclosed today in Italian quarters.

The American experts have taken the attitude according to an Italian spokesman, that, while the abolition of gas is highly desirable, it is impossible of accomplishment, because no nation with chemical factories can be relied on to refrain from using it in war time.

LOCAL DELEGATES TO ATTEND GOOD ROADS CONGRESS

ROAD MACHINERY EXPOSITION, COLISEUM, CHICAGO

This city and county are being urged to make suitable provision for sending delegates officially to the Twelfth American Good Roads Congress and Thirteenth National Good Roads Show to be held under the auspices of the American Road Builders' Association
at the Coliseum, in Chicago, January 17, 18, 19 and 20 next.

The mayors of more than 5,000 American and Canadian cities and the boards of commissioners in 3,000 counties have each been asked to appoint from three to five delegates. In many cases the delegates will be headed by the mayors and the commissioners themselves.

An exhaustive program dealing with the latest methods developed in the construction of all types of roads and streets, safety on the highways, road taxes, street assessments, highway

bond issues, road administration and maintenance, traffic regulation, highway transportation and numerous other subjects of vital interest to the officials who deal with public thoroughfares, as well as contractors, engineers and good roads advocates generally, has been prepared. Twenty thousand delegates are expected to attend the congress.

The big exposition of labor saving machinery, methods and appliances which will include many things that are new, will be the greatest of the kind he world has ever known.
Enough space has already been engaged by exhibitors to fill the Coliseum and Annex, breaking all previous records for this exposition and making it necessary for the Road Builders' Association to lease adjoining buildings in order to house the overflow.

FIGHTING TUBERCULOSIS

By Dr. James Ball Naylor.

Tuberculosis!
The white plague!
For years and years, tuberculosis was deemed fatal, necessarily.

For a physician to determine that an individual had tuberculosis was to pronounce that individual's death sentence.

But thanks to modern medical science it isn't so today.

Less than a generation ago, even,
tuberculosis seemed an unconquerable and implacable enemy to mankind. It carried off thousands, and ever increasing thousands, of our population every year; and no known methods of cure or treatment apparently availed—in any measure worth while.

But discovery of the bacillus which causes the disease came; following that came definite knowledge of how the infection is conveyed; and later came methods and means of building physical resistance to the dread disease.

The battle to save those afflicted with tuberculosis, and to prevent others from contracting it, is now nation-wide; and the conservative forces are gradually winning.

The fight calls for time, for money,
for service and sacrifice; but the fight is worth all its costs.

For it is bringing results.

The vision we get today is inspiring and encouraging.

People are giving their cash to the cause all over the country.

Devoted workers are busy in the laboratories, seeking further knowledge of the plague.

Hospitals for the examination and treatment of patients are springing up in every state.

Knowledge and means of prevention are becoming general.

And deaths from tuberculosis, and cases of tuberculosis, are steadily declining.

But the battle isn't yet won.
The fight must go on—and with increased vigor and intensity.

To let up—means to lose.
To refuse to give of time and money and service—means to fail to

SENATOR TOM WATSON IS "STORMY PETREL" AMONG THE LAWMAKERS AT WASHINGTON

Fiery Georgian Is Anti-Everything and Will Threaten A Fist Fight, A Duel Or A Speech If Senators Disagree With His Opinions; Has Five More Tumultuous Years To Serve

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—If everybody else is agreed on a question, then Senator Tom Watson will oppose it. That is the consensus of opinion among national legislators who have watched this fiery Georgian during nearly a year of tumultuous conduct, with indications that he will continue to keep the Upper House in an uproar throughout the five years he still has to serve.

Senator Watson was elected a member of Congress in 1890 on the wave of Populist sentiment, serving one term. In 1896 he was nominated for the Vice-Presidency by the St. Louis Populist convention, which endorsed Bryan for the Presidential nomination.

The Georgia legislator has aroused various Catholic organizations to protest against his Senate membership

True Detective Stories OUT OF THE AIR

SOMEWHERE, somehow, the Germans were getting messages through from the United States to the fatherland. That much was certain. Washington knew it beyond the shadow of a doubt, but the way in which the messages were transmitted was a mystery—dark and apparently unfathomable.

This was in the days before America entered the war, in the days when the United States was, theoretically at least, a neutral nation. But Von Bernstorff, Von Papen and the rest of the embassy at Washington were doing everything they could to further their schemes from this side of the Atlantic.

But not even the secret service could penetrate the mystery of the messages. That these were flashed from the huge wireless towers on this side of the Atlantic, or relayed from the German radio stations, seemed fairly obvious. But how?

"They must be sending the stuff through the air," argued the chief of the secret service to Talbot, one of his best men. "For the simple reason that we've closed all their other channels."

"Any idea as to the code they are using?" asked Talbot.

"None at all, but it's probably concealed somewhere in the messages which they send out to the ships at sea—press bulletins, stock quotations, and the like. We've studied them carefully, but haven't been able to find a thing."

"How about the outburst from Nauven every morning?"

"The only explanation for that seems to be that it's an attempt to 'fog the air' so that ships and other towers can't get anything through."

"Yes, but in that case would the Germans send it for an hour early every morning? Why not all day long? And why that hush of language that doesn't mean a thing? If they were trying to fog things they'd wireless the Bible or Nietzsche or excerpts from some other long book instead of that mess of meaningless rot."

"All right," retorted the chief, "if you think there's a clue there, go to it." But Talbot didn't begin his investigations with a study of the Nauven "hush."

He made his way at first to the laboratory of Charles E. Appgar, a deep student of wireless telegraphy. It was to Appgar that he told his troubles and, when he had finished, the expert leaned forward and picked up something from the table in front of him.

"See that?" Appgar asked. Talbot nodded.

"Looks like an old-fashioned cylindrical phonograph record," he said. "Just what it is," admitted the expert, "only you use it in connection with a wireless phonograph."

"A wireless phonograph?" and the government operative's voice showed that he had never heard of such a contrivance.

"Yes, a phonograph attached to the receiving end of a radio station. I finished working on it a few days ago, and I think it's just what you need for this job. It will record and keep track of every sound that comes into the station, enabling you to 'listen in' on messages months after they have been sent. With a supply of these records and the necessary patience you ought to be able to figure out the system the Huns are using, without their being any the wiser. It may take weeks or even months, but it's just a question of being everlasting at it."

Appgar was right. Talbot found that it took him nearly four months to get on to the system—four months of ceaseless listening-in at the end of a De Forest audion detector which picks up sound waves from thousands of miles away, and even then he would never have located the secret had it not been for the wax cylinders. But with the aid of these automatic detectives he was able to repeat each message until he had it almost by heart, trying out the various combinations and symbols until he stumbled across the right one.

Then, one morning, when the chief of the secret service least expected him, he burst into the office with the exclamation:

"I've got it—the fifth, tenth and fifteenth flashes! See?" and he held out a sheet of paper on which were rows upon rows of figures and letters, commencing with "5-8-K-14-B."

"Looks interesting," admitted the chief, "but what does it mean?"

"Got a German dictionary here? No—well, I have. Luckily it's an old edition—just the one they're using for the code. The letters give the numbers of the pages, and the figures designate the words, the big ones in bold type. Five and eight K means the fifth and eighth words on page eleven, 14 B means the fourteenth word on page two, and so on. By spelling 'em so far apart in the meaningless wireless messages—or even in the press bulletins sent out from this side—they are able to fill in with lots of stuff to throw you off the scent. But the code's simple enough—that's what makes it such a wonder!"

And it wasn't until Von Bernstorff received his sailing orders that he knew the secret service had been plucking his messages and his instructions out of the air, through the ingenious use of a wax phonograph cylinder.

LAST MEETING OF PRESENT COUNCIL TUESDAY EVENING

The last business meeting of the present city council will be held Tuesday evening, December 27.

It will meet once again on January 9, but will adjourn immediately to make place for the new council.

Instead of meeting next week on Monday night, the regular meeting night, the council will meet Tuesday evening. Monday is being observed as a holiday generally because of Christmas coming on Sunday. For that reason the council meeting has been postponed one night.

At the meeting Tuesday evening, the ordinance providing a relief or pension fund for the city police will be given its second reading. With a full quorum, the ordinance will probably be either passed or turned down. At the meeting Monday evening December 12, only five councilmen were present, not enough to allow official action on the ordinance.

Approval of the city budget for the coming six months will be held over until the new council is installed and a finance committee appointed from it, according to information given out Friday by Dr. W. R. Davis, present chairman of the council finance committee.

Writing on Writing.

It is curious how few American writers have cared or been able to write upon the art of writing, especially upon their own art. If we look back through our literary history the novelists, poets, even the essayists, seem like a file of American school boys, proficient in games, but tongue-tied when it comes to explaining them. Poe is an outstanding exception. He knew what he was trying to do before he did it and explained in criticism that is notably better than his comment on his contemporaries. Thoreau and Emerson had much to say of how they thought, but little of how and why they wrote. Where else, until one comes to Whitman, with his formal and informal defenses of his own particular methods, is there another?—Literary Review.

Care of Paintings.

The pictures in a home are apt to suffer from the lack of attention which in time detracts from their appearance. Oil paintings should be lightly cleaned once a year, being wiped gently with a very fine sponge or camels leather wet with clear water. Do not use soap or any other cleansing substance in the water. Immediately after sponging polish the surface lightly with a dry silk handkerchief. Gilt frames should be dusted frequently. A camel's hair paintbrush is effective for this. Fly marks can be removed by the use of a little white of egg.

The receiver of a telephone set for the deaf that has been invented in Germany is small enough to be hidden in a person's ear, while the transmitter can be carried in a handbag or fastened to clothing.

ITALY PROPOSES

A wide difference of opinion exists today between the British and American experts as to the submarine strength of the five great powers.

In the naval discussion according to American figures, on which the Hughes program was based—the United States now has 95,000 tons of submarines; Great Britain 32,464; France 42,350; Japan 31,400 and Italy 20,228.

If these figures carry the United States will have to scrap 5,000 tons, while the other nations will have to build slightly to come up to the Hughes program.

It will be necessary for the British and American experts to get together and reconcile their figures before any final agreement can be reached. They began comparing notes today to find wherein the difference lies.

WIFE TELLS OF THE LIFE WORK OF LINDENFELD

Says His Wall Street Explosion Confession Is Figment of Imagination

A POOR HUSBAND

Develops That "Notorious Red" May Be Only "Stool Pigeon" Of Burns Detective Agency

NEW YORK, Dec. 24.—The person best acquainted in the world with Wolf Lindenfeld, police and detective "stool pigeon" who William J. Burns declares has "confessed" to knowing all about the Wall Street explosion, is Mrs. Wolf Lindenfeld. Mrs. Lindenfeld says her husband's "confession" is a figment of the imagination.

At her home, 510 West 148th Street where she is living with their two children, Mrs. Lindenfeld says Lindenfeld is not only a consummate liar but that he would not have the "nerve" to connect himself with a dangerous plot. Neither, she added, did he ever display any interest in "radical" movements or ideas such as would lead him into such a fantastic affair as he is said to have described—even if such a plot existed.

"But," she declared, "if becoming a Communist or anything else seemed (Continued on Page Six)

WAY TO MANUFACTURE GOLD DISCOVERED BY GERMAN SCIENTISTS

BERLIN, Dec. 24. — The statement of Professor Fisher of England that synthetic gold has already been discovered in Germany, is correct, it was learned today.

One gramme of the metal exists somewhere in a German laboratory.

The secret of the gold production is being carefully guarded. Only six men in the country know the process.

Synthetic gold cannot yet be made on a commercial basis but the government is aiding in the experiments to this end. Experiments include the development of an electric vacuum furnace scale.

The discovery, if made commercially applicable, might make possible payment of the German reparations in synthetic gold.

Illinois Miners In Move To Rescue Kansas Strikers From The Attack Of Interests

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24. — John L. Lewis' policy of attempting to use the power of the international office of the United Mine Workers of America to break the strike of the Kansas coal miners, which is essentially in resistance to the Kansas Industrial Court Law, has become the chief topic of discussion in labor headquarters here, since Lewis has sent a committee to President Compters of the A. Frank Farrington, president of the Illinois District of the United Mine Workers, is seen as the leader of a crusade which organized labor in the Middle West was compelled to make to defend itself against an epidemic of Kansas industrial courts. For The Sake Of The Unfortunate (An Editorial)

Things are not going just right in this goodly land of ours. The times are out of joint here, everywhere. In Russia, thru social and political maladjustments and thru the heavy hand of drouth there is a lack of food so appalling that the liberal-hearted in every land are giving as they can that the hand of pestilence and fever and death may be stayed.

In China, in India, lands of chronic want, the burden of sickness and misery is heavier than usual. Thruout Europe the legacy of war is still hovering like a mighty bird of ill-omen over once fair lands now tax-ridden and populations steeped in poverty. Wherever the mind carries us, from every corner of the earth the telegraph message brings to America the same story of woe and bitter need.

Especially disheartening is news of this kind at the Christmas season. It is at the Christmas time that everyone wishes that the whole world might be glad. It is at this season that all of us would like to see misery replaced by comfort, sickness by health, hunger and poverty by plenty, wretchedness and woe by mirth and gladness unconfined.

So it is at this season that each community sets out to alleviate what suffering it can. For the once our ministrations are local instead of world wide. All over America such agencies as the Elks, the Salvation Army and the various organizations within the churches and lodges look each to their own particular communities in order that the dawn of Christmas morn may find no needy mother, no forgotten child.

By common consent it is to the Elks that most American communities, and this one along with the rest, look for leadership in the great annual Christmas drive. And to their credit be it said they never fail. We have heard people express amazement that the Elks can raise thousands of dollars in a single day in a community as small as this. There is no mystery about it.

They start right. Before they ask others to give they give with rare liberality themselves. Before they go on the streets and pose as newspaper vendors they have purchased so freely of their own wares as to have the foundation of their charity fund well laid. When an Elk solicits you to buy a copy of his paper rest assured that he has paid more than he asks of you.

The first Christmas battle of the antlered herd is in the privacy of their own lodge rooms. They give and give again and again, if the day has not turned out right and the high stakes they set in their deliberations have not been attained by nightfall—they give again.

Men of this kind are not given to capitalizing their own virtues. They are seldom heard to moralize. With them it is deeds rather than words, and rarely is it that the left hand of an Elk knows what the right hand has done. In this, we believe, is to be found the secret of the whirlwind campaign for Christmas funds waged year after year with such unvarying success by our antlered friends.

Give liberally to them today. Give liberally to the Salvation Army, to the churches, to every agency which will aid in blotting suffering and want from this community for one day. There is so much unhappiness in the world that the least we can do is to vow inwardly that all the heartaches shall be banished for this one day at least. There is so much hunger, even in communities like this, that the most we can give will not be too much. There are so many poorly clad women and children that substantial sums are required to meet the test.

Today the streets will be filled with people and the busy, bustling stores thronged with radiant shoppers. To all outward appearances there is no suffering, no misery in the world. But behind the scenes there is sickness aplenty with no money to buy medical aid. In scores of homes there is want with no complaining, poverty with no reproach. It is up to you, busy shoppers, to put an end to this for just one day.

All you have to do is to give. The Elks, the Salvation Army and other agencies have supplied the organized effort thru which your dollars can go straight to the relief of human woe. The thot, the time, the efforts are supplied by others. Only loosen your purse strings and do unto the least of these as you would be done by and a greater joy will be yours than the costliest of gifts could confer.

PEOPLE'S FORUM
PROTECTION
Editor of the Tribune:
Mr. Lease claims he is boycotted. I say he was not for there is a law against boycott. There is also a law upheld by the supreme court which allows peaceful picketing. Why don't you give the public the facts and the truth, Mr. Lease, or Schmidt? Your friend, alluded to in the forum Saturday evening, December 17, asked for the truth. In the first place Mr. Lease joined the union, took an obligation to live up to the by-laws and constitution and did not do it. He kept his shop open after hours. Of course he has no family to go to as the other barbers have. So the barbers' local committee went to him and tried to straiten out the case, which he refused to do. He hired barbers from out of town that were union men who violated their obligation and came here with fines on them so the barbers' fined Lease also and agreed to remit most of it, and agreed to get him barbers but he backed down. Lease's case was turned over to the Trades and Labor council grievance committee. They waited on Lease and together with Lease and some of the barbers they had a meeting in Trade's council hall which resulted in Lease signing this agreement:
"I, F. A. Lease promise to operate my shop as a union shop, employing men, I shall request that the men now in my employ, swear themselves with this local, and in the event they do not I will accept union men to be furnished by this local if said men can qualify and prove themselves competent."
Lease broke this agreement after signing it before witnesses.
Now as to picketing, that has been done by the Trades Council placing men there and the council has the names of the business people who have patronized Lease while he ran the open shop. No doubt Lease will see his mistake when this fight is over as others have in the past. Mr. Lease says he could not get protection from the city. I say he has received it. He placed bills on poles in different parts of the city giving his prices for haircuts and shaves which is against the city ordinance. He was not arrested as he should have been for violating the ordinance. Now Mr. Schmidt has the truth of the case as he asked it thru the Forum in a signed article. Lease and Schmidt asked if the barbers would not have pickets arrested if they were placed at union shops. I would say no, as they have nothing to picket for. Union barbers as citizens are living up to their obligation and the law and are trying to work decent hours to give recreation to their families. No doubt Lease is doing business but how long he will I dare not say. The business people of Coshocton think too well of our local barbers and know the barbers have long hours under the closed shop, and I think they will patronize the closed shop. What action Trades council will take against Lease's patrons but some will be taken, no doubt, or has by now. I trust Mr. Lease will see his mistake and line up before it is too late. I have heard he would get free rent as long as he runs an open shop. I cannot say it is true, but if it is, we know he is not alone in fighting the barbers' union. His open shop is bound to lose because his cause will not stand publicity. It is true organization that the working people today enjoy the short hours and holidays and a fair wage, improved working conditions which have made possible a few hours a day for self improvement, making them better American citizens. May the unions live long and heat out the so-called American plan or the open shop as Lease advertises it.

A merry Christmas To all Father John's Medicine

NEW YORK LETTER Day-By-Day

NEW YORK, Dec. 23.—It is a season of Old Scrooge yarns and cartoons of spindly legged children gazing at window Christmas trees. From the cell of a state prison in the far west there came to me recently a letter from a young New York actor. To tell the story I must be a bit personal.

I wrote "In the offing, ploughing thru the sea of life, a strange bark flying the flag of The Spoiler, I could not resist the privilege that the season affords to send you greetings. Every night a newspaper with your articles is pushed into my cell, etc."

It was an uncomplaining letter breathing the spirit of one who has borne the "bludgeonings of chance" with "the unconquerable soul." A man who had made his mistake, regretted it and was cheerfully paying the penalty.

I replied that I would like to send him some cigarettes and books if it was permitted. The young man is lonely—he is far from home. And yet I quote in part from his reply: "Your bonhomie in offering cigarettes is hindered by an institutional keynote which urges us to roll our own. Regarding a book, I'll compromise."

"There is a lady, a sick lady, at St. Vincent's in New York. Her name is Nellie Ravell, a theatrical press agent. For three years she's been featured in a cast—not a typical Morosco; a plaster of paris and iron one, I don't know her—that's my loss. I have read of the brave way she's playing the game."

"So. Instead of sending me a book if its all the same and won't offend you, you might send it to her; or a flower. There's nothing sentimental about my wish. I do not know her. And you need not mention my name for as Rube Goldberg would say 'It Doesn't Mean Anything!'"

Miss Ravell, who is an old friend of mine, has been cheered by his message. It did much to make her Christmas brighter. So endeth a true Christmas tale.

By way of contrast to my friend in prison I met a young lady in a Greenwich Village tea room the other day. She thirsts for higher things—alcohol she has money and a good home. She is a chronic moaner and after a half hour with her one feels like challenging her to moan for five cents a side or something like that. Her intellect is complex. I believe she thinks Babe Ruth wrote "The Bat."

She shames Christmas because of its sham, its hypocrisy and silly gift giving.

Herb Roth, the caricaturist, is buying a country home in Westchester. He is going to call it "Danduff on the Knob."

Dr. Royal Copeland, New York's health officer, has made the Christmas season much brighter in the Fifth Avenue corset shops. He has decided that the new style corsets are a distinct benefit to women not only in serving as a brace but in giving a symmetry to the figure. The corset has had a rough time of it for a year but it shows signs of coming back again and again taking its place as a part of the smart dresser's wearing apparel.

WALT MASON
CHRISTMAS TIME
Again the Christmas season brings gladness to the land, and he is fit for ransom whose soul does not expand, who does not feel like rising to altitudes surprising and loudly advertising his joy, to beat the band. Old Santa Claus is bringing the presents on his sleigh, and little kids are waiting the dawn of Christmas day, and the myriads of angels, and I have burdens weighty. I'd think myself cheap skates if I could not be gay. At Christmas time we hunger for chances to be kind, and all the world is younger, and grinsches tall behind, and every normal chappie would make some fellow happy, and Christmas is a snap he is mighty glad to find. My years are nearly ninety, and I have many ills, but while I drink my pine tea, and take my beeswax pills, I hear the Christmas singing; my crutches from me flinging, I rise and go a-swinging to coast down icy hills. This is the merry season when lights are all aglow, and Christmas gifts, the trees on, make such a gaudy show; and in the frosty weather the whole bunch gets together, and then, with lungs of leather, sings carols in the snow. And now we're all forgiving the grudges of the past, and we are glad we're living in amity at last, and if there is a fellow whom Christmas doesn't mellow, his heart is surely yellow, and he should stand aghast!

ALLAN PINKERTON'S RECORD CASE

Copyright by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.
THERE was no response to the impatient knocking on the heavy doors of the Adams Express company's building near the end of the Columbus (O.) Union station, one night in the middle of winter. There stood the train, with the usual bustle and clamor preparatory to departure, but the express clerk and his assistant had not made their appearance.

Bang! Bang! Bang!
This time John Grossman, the express messenger, knocked harder than ever, for it was beginning to dawn upon him that something must be wrong. A moment later he tried the knob of the door. To his amazement it turned easily and he stepped forward into utter darkness, stumbling over boxes and packages until he reached the gas jet in the center of the room. Papers and parcels lay in wild confusion all over the floor, the door of the safe stood open and the clerk and his assistant were lying in one corner, in a sort of stupor.

It was evident that the two men had been chloroformed—the sickening odor of the drug still pervaded the room—and that the company had been robbed, in spite of the fact that hundreds of people had been just outside the building all during the evening. These circumstances, coupled with the fact that $40,000 was missing from the safe, were all that Allan Pinkerton had to work upon when he reached Columbus the following morning.

The details of the robbery were obtained directly from John Barker, the express clerk.

According to Barker, he and his assistant were stretched out on two cots, as usual about ten o'clock in the evening, taking a nap before going on duty on the train which was due to leave Columbus shortly after midnight.

"I was awakened by what appeared to be a muffled pounding or pushing at the door," Barker continued. "Was the door locked?" Inquired Pinkerton.

"It was—and bolted. I didn't pay any attention to the matter because, while we did have $72,000 in the safe—$32,000 of it in revenue stamps—we had often guarded a good deal more, and I thought the noise had been made by some one who had stumbled against the door in the darkness. Then, before I got really awake, I heard the bolt give, and the next thing I knew some one had piloned my arms, and I caught a whiff of something which I recognized as chloroform. I struggled, but it was no use. When I came to, Grossman, the messenger, was bending over me, and the whole place looked like a cyclone had struck it. The $40,000 in cash was gone, but they had overlooked or deliberately left the $32,000 in stamps."

Pinkerton made no comment at the time, but continued his examination of the room where the robbery had taken place. A careful scrutiny of the door revealed two interesting facts: The bolt had been bent, as if it had been in place when the door was forced, but it was bent far more than was necessary to secure an entrance to the room, and there were no scratches or other signs of violence on the outside of the door.

All the evidence appeared to point to the fact that the job had been handled from the inside, and Pinkerton immediately ordered the arrest of Barker and his assistant. The two men protested their innocence.

Upon looking into Barker's antecedents, Pinkerton found that the express clerk had a brother living in Chicago, a man who was reputed to be quite wealthy and whom Barker stated would willingly go on his bail if permitted to do so. But the Chicago branch of the Pinkerton agency reported that the other Barker was not only not wealthy, but was prominent in the life of the underworld.

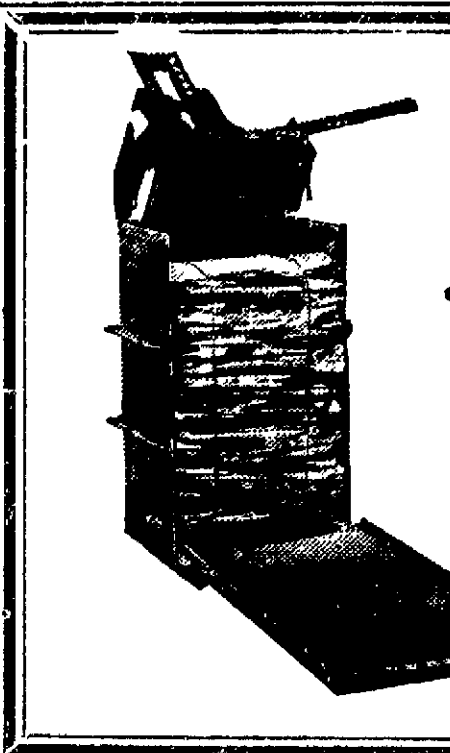

"Where was this man on the night of the Columbus robbery?" Allan Pinkerton inquired by wire. "Unable to obtain definite information," came back the reply; "but he is not in Chicago."

"Hail him closely, and arrest him the instant he attempts to leave the city," were the telegraphic directions which followed.

Early the following morning, less than 26 hours after the crime in Columbus, Henry Barker was arrested en route to Canada, and $14,000 was found in the lining of his valise. Later after having been given a taste of the famous Pinkerton "silence cure," he revealed the hiding place of the other $26,000 and the details of the whole affair, which he had claimed his brother had planned. The scheme was simplicity itself. John Barker had administered chloroform to his sleeping assistant. Then he opened the outside door, admitted his brother, and opened the safe. After strewing papers all over the floor, Henry Barker placed a cloth saturated with chloroform over his brother's nostrils, stuffed the cash in his pocket and left, first bending back the bolt on the door. Unfortunately, however, he had been a little too thorough in attending to this last detail, and had left a clue which enabled Pinkerton to start the two men toward the penitentiary within 48 hours after the discovery of the robbery.

PUBLICITY CHIEF WEAPON OF CHINA AGAINST JAPANESE

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—The Chinese delegates today were convinced they have found the weakness in the Japanese armor. Henceforth during the conference they will direct their attack unceasingly towards this supposedly vulnerable point. They believe such a policy is their only hope of winning out on the Shantung issue and of their 21 demands.

The chief weapon of the Chinese is to be publicity. The weakness they believe they have discovered in the Japanese armor is a newly developed sensitiveness of the motives of the Japanese government and a rapidity increasing national desire to have the world and particularly China thinned of Japan.

At the next meeting of the eastern committee, China will press her demand that the committee give consideration to the momentous question of the 21 demands. They will also insist on the committee taking up the Shantung question provided no favorable reply is received by that time from Tokio.

In reply to a question as to whether Japan really had a desire to settle the Shantung question in a manner satisfactory to China, the Japanese statesman perhaps unwittingly let the cat out of the bag. The Chinese had, he said unfortunately given the Shantung an amount of publicity out of proportion of its importance. His intimated the Japanese people and government considered it highly important that the matter be cleared.

RACY SHEET AT UNIVERSITY IS EAGERLY SOUGHT

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—"The Ghost" has lived up to its name. Officially suppressed yesterday as "immoral and indecent" The Ghost, a monthly publication at George Washington university, was today reported as running its second edition.

"The Ghost" is doing like liquor," said the student body today. "Bootleg copies are selling at a dollar a copy."

The Ghost which made Dean Howard L. Hodgins blush before he ordered it suppressed, has become the subject of a bitter controversy within the university, parents' teachers organizations, and the faculty (officially) are opposed to it, while the students declare it merely "snappy stuff."

High leaders said the dean's "attitude of prudery" had shocked them, not "The Ghost."

MORSE OFFERS HIS BOOKS TO OFFICIALS

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Charles W. Morse, New York shipbuilder under fire for his war time activities, today agreed to turn over the books of all his shipping concerns for examination by the federal grand jury probing his operations. Morse also agreed to waive immunity rights, which he had previously demanded.

This action was taken when Morse's attorney asked the District of Columbia supreme court for permission to withdraw a petition filed yesterday in which the shipbuilder asked an injunction against use of his books in the probe.

BANDITS FOILED BY CHICAGO COP

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—Frustrated in a bold attempt at kidnapping and robbery, one young bandit is dead and his companion is under arrest today. The dead bandit was identified as Carl Gilbert, of Seattle, Wyoming and the captured man is C. Thomas of Seattle. Police believe Thomas may be the man who held up passengers on a B. & O. passenger train several days ago.

Victims of the robbery are to be asked to identify the man. The two bandits came to grief when they attempted to rob Thomas Callahan, former manager of the Chicago White Sox.

When Mr. and Mrs. Callahan, their daughter Margaret, and George Hardin brother of Mrs. Callahan, were entering a taxi cab to go to a dance, the bandits appeared. Emil Krothen, driver of the taxi, resisted and was shot but not seriously wounded. The bandits then commandeered the cab, with Mrs. Callahan, her daughter and Hardin in it and dashed away. Callahan who was left standing on the sidewalk, dashed into the house, obtained a gun and gave pursuit in another auto.

Policeman W. F. McNaughton was picked up, and after a wild chase over street covered pavements, the bandits were overtaken. The robbers opened fire on their pursuers, but McNaughton's aim was more deadly and he shot Gilbert and captured Thomas.

Chief of Police Fitzmorris announced he would promote McNaughton to a sergeantcy for his bravery.

True Detective Stories

THE DEVONSHIRE DIAMONDS

Copyright by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.

HAD Lady Alberta Devon not yielded to temptation at the last moment and stepped out of her boudoir to secure her sister's opinion upon the effect of her latest Parisian creation it is quite possible that Inspector John Sweeney of Scotland Yard would not have had the opportunity of proving his detective genius in a peculiarly striking manner.

Lady Alberta was absent from her room for less than ten minutes; but during that time occurred an event which, for several hours, threatened to disrupt several of the highest social circles in England.

It was the night of the Devon ball, held in the big old-fashioned house in the center of the Devon estate. As was only to be expected, the list of guests read like a section from Burke's Peerage—a fact which made Inspector Sweeney's work distinctly more difficult when the loss of the famous necklace of Devonshire was reported to Scotland Yard.

Early in the evening Lady Alberta had dismissed her maid with the statement that she would complete her toilette herself, but just as she was about to put on her necklace—an heirloom which had greatly increased in value because of its historic connections—she thought it would be well to secure an unbiased opinion as to the effect of her gown, which had just arrived from Paris. When she returned from her sister's room a few minutes later she reached for the necklace, only to discover that it had vanished!

Positive that she had had it in her hands less than ten minutes before, she searched the room and then summoned her husband, whom she told of the mysterious loss.

"There is only one thing to do," declared his lordship, after verifying his wife's statement that the jewels were missing, "and that is to notify the police."

Inspector Sweeney reached the Devon house shortly after midnight, while the ball was still in progress, and secured the meager details of the case directly from her ladyship.

"Did you notice any one in the hall as you passed through on the way to your sister's room?" Sweeney asked.

"No one at all."

"How long has your maid been with you?"

"Less than two months—but she came well recommended."

Finally, in spite of protests, the operative from Scotland Yard gave orders that no one was to leave the grounds of the Devon estate without his permission, and, as the ball formed part of a week's festivities, it was possible to arrange this without mentioning the reason for the request to the guests. Armed with a list of those present, with their servants, Sweeney then repaired to Lady Devon's boudoir to commence active investigations.

His knowledge of London society was sufficient to inform him that at least three of the guests, despite their titles, might easily have been guilty of lifting the necklace if the opportunity had presented itself.

"The question is," mused Sweeney, "who could have known that Lady Devon would have been out of the room for just those few moments? She wasn't summoned by any message and it would therefore appear that some one was hiding in the hope that an opportunity would present itself. That would seem to eliminate the guests—but not the servants."

Working along this line, Sweeney made a careful examination of the toilet articles on the dressing table where the diamonds had been placed. After a thorough scrutiny of the perfume bottles, pieces of silver and other articles which were highly polished, the detective made his way downstairs and sent word to Lady Devon that he would like to speak to her for a moment.

"Your ladyship," he said, "will you kindly press the tips of your fingers lightly on this," and he held out one of the hand mirrors from the boudoir.

"No," he added, "I'm not suspecting you of making away with your own diamonds—I merely wish to discover which finger-prints are yours."

"Then, a moment later, "Thank you. I thought as much."

"Now," he continued, "I want you to instruct your butler—whom I understand has been with you for a number of years—to secure the prints of all the servants under your roof. Tell him to make any excuse for it that he wants to, but I must secure a complete collection. Kindly have them sent to my room the first thing in the morning. Meanwhile, don't worry. If my instructions are rigidly carried out, your necklace should be discovered before nine o'clock."

But Sweeney underestimated by some two hours. It was eleven o'clock on the following morning before he received the complete set of finger-prints, and ten minutes later a pair of handcuffs was dangling from the wrists of William Sinclair, valet of one of the titled guests, and, as it afterwards developed, a man with a lengthy prison record. The necklace was discovered stowed away in the false bottom of Sinclair's trunk.

As Sweeney started back toward London with his prisoner he cautioned him to be more careful in the future not to attempt a theft unless he wore gloves.

Bryant wrote "Thanatopsis" at 19. William Cullen Bryant's "Thanatopsis" was first published in the North American Review in 1816. The title, from the Greek, signifies "a view of death." The poem, written when Bryant was but nineteen, is in blank verse, and is considered by many the most impressive of his works.

WOMEN TOO TIMID AS JOB HUNTERS IS HER OPINION

Copyright by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.

"I'll be back in a few minutes," said Henry Goudle, cashier of the Bank of Liverpool, to one of his associates. "I'm just going across the street to get a bite of lunch."

An hour later the officials of the bank began to wonder where Goudle was, but the fact that his hat still remained upon its accustomed peg indicated that the cashier wasn't far away, and that he would soon return. But at the closing hour that afternoon Goudle was still missing—and when an auditor went over his books it was discovered that a hundred and seventy-five thousand pounds (some $850,000) had also disappeared!

Inquiry at the house where Goudle had lodged failed to bring to light any trace of the missing cashier, who had left home that morning as usual, apparently without any intention of being away over night. His clothes were in their accustomed position, and even his toilet articles were untouched. In fact, if it hadn't been for the disappearance of the money from the bank, the police would have searched the hospitals, on the theory that Goudle had met with an accident.

But, as Frank Frost, superintendent of Scotland Yard, pointed out, it was hardly likely that a bank official and $850,000 would vanish at one and the same time without some connection between the two events.

"As luck would have it," continued Frost, one of the ablest detectives in England, "Goudle has chosen the simplest manner in which to make his escape—the easiest from his point of view and the most difficult from the standpoint of the police. It is comparatively simple to find a man who lays his plans in advance. You can usually trace his baggage or his railway tickets. But Goudle just walked out to lunch and lost himself somewhere. He left only one clue behind him—his hat."

Therefore, working on the assumption that a hatless man would be quite conspicuous, and that Goudle, knowing this, would immediately purchase another hat, Frost made the rounds of the shops near the Liverpool bank. From the clerk in one of them he obtained the information that a man answering to the description of the missing cashier had purchased a cloth cap of a distinctive pattern only a few moments after noon on the day that Goudle vanished.

By means of this clue and a detailed report on Goudle's appearance, Frost soon had every man connected with Scotland Yard searching for the absconding cashier. But it was several weeks before he was located and captured in a lodging house in the north of England.

However, the arrest of the man who looted the Bank of Liverpool did not by any means close the case.

Even before he was discovered, Frost had found out that Goudle had been in the habit of playing the races—patronizing a clique of "hand-book men," who had played upon his cupidity in such a manner that they, and not he, had secured the benefits of his dishonesty. In order to recover the money, Frost therefore had to round up the members of this gambling ring and force them to disgorge.

It developed that the leader of the organization, sensing a way in which to make a lot of money, without running any risk, had approached Goudle with an account of a "fixed race" which was to be run at Epsom Downs, and that the cashier, believing that he could clean up a fortune in a single day, had taken twenty-five thousand pounds from the bank, falsifying the accounts to conceal the shortage. The man's credulity is evident from the fact that he placed the money at odds of 20 to 1, which meant that he stood to win half a million pounds, or $2,500,000 if his horse came in first. Of course, no bookmaker could afford to pay a bet of this size—but Goudle overlooked this fact and cheerfully wagered his "borrowed" capital. The horse naturally failed to win, and, in an effort to recoup his losses, the cashier commenced systematically to loot the bank's funds.

One of the odd features of the case which Frost discovered, by blind luck, Goudle one day placed a big bet on a horse that won. When he went to collect his bet, with the firm intention of squaring his accounts with the bank, he was casually informed that the wager had not been placed in time, and he was advised to put it on another "sure tip," which lost. When his defalcations reached a point when it was hopeless to attempt further concealment from the bank authorities, Goudle "went out to lunch."

It didn't take Frost long to discover that, in planning a round-up of the gambling gang he was tackling one of the most difficult jobs of his career.

One by one Frost picked up the various threads of the tangled case. One by one he followed the various clues, at least one of which led to the suicide of a member of the book-makers' clique. But, in addition to seeing that Goudle was sent to prison for ten years, Frost secured evidence which forced the return of all but a small amount of money which had been taken from the Bank of Liverpool and placed upon horses, which, save in a single instance, had no chance whatever to win.

Too Curious.
Tillie Clinger says the reason she didn't last long as a saloon girl at the jewelry counter was because when a man came in and said he wanted something nice for his baby she asked him if his baby was a boy, a girl or a chicken.—Dallas News.

WOMEN! DRY CLEAN THINGS AT HOME

Try it! For a few cents you can dry clean everything.

Save five to ten dollars quickly by dry cleaning everything in the home with gasoline that would be ruined by soap and water—suits, coats, waists, skirts, laces, gloves, shoes, furs, draperies, rugs—everything!

Place a gallon or more of gasoline in a dishpan or washbowl, then put in the things to be dry cleaned, then wash them with Solvite soap. Shortly everything comes out looking like new. Nothing fades, shrinks, or wrinkles. Do not attempt to dry clean without Solvite soap. This gasoline soap is the secret of all dry cleaning.

A package of Solvite soap containing directions for home dry cleaning costs little at any drug store. Dry clean outdoors or away from flame.

SHADOW OF EVIL

Copyright by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.

"I'll be back in a few minutes," said Henry Goudle, cashier of the Bank of Liverpool, to one of his associates. "I'm just going across the street to get a bite of lunch."

An hour later the officials of the bank began to wonder where Goudle was, but the fact that his hat still remained upon its accustomed peg indicated that the cashier wasn't far away, and that he would soon return. But at the closing hour that afternoon Goudle was still missing—and when an auditor went over his books it was discovered that a hundred and seventy-five thousand pounds (some $850,000) had also disappeared!

Inquiry at the house where Goudle had lodged failed to bring to light any trace of the missing cashier, who had left home that morning as usual, apparently without any intention of being away over night. His clothes were in their accustomed position, and even his toilet articles were untouched. In fact, if it hadn't been for the disappearance of the money from the bank, the police would have searched the hospitals, on the theory that Goudle had met with an accident.

But, as Frank Frost, superintendent of Scotland Yard, pointed out, it was hardly likely that a bank official and $850,000 would vanish at one and the same time without some connection between the two events.

"As luck would have it," continued Frost, one of the ablest detectives in England, "Goudle has chosen the simplest manner in which to make his escape—the easiest from his point of view and the most difficult from the standpoint of the police. It is comparatively simple to find a man who lays his plans in advance. You can usually trace his baggage or his railway tickets. But Goudle just walked out to lunch and lost himself somewhere. He left only one clue behind him—his hat."

Therefore, working on the assumption that a hatless man would be quite conspicuous, and that Goudle, knowing this, would immediately purchase another hat, Frost made the rounds of the shops near the Liverpool bank. From the clerk in one of them he obtained the information that a man answering to the description of the missing cashier had purchased a cloth cap of a distinctive pattern only a few moments after noon on the day that Goudle vanished.

By means of this clue and a detailed report on Goudle's appearance, Frost soon had every man connected with Scotland Yard searching for the absconding cashier. But it was several weeks before he was located and captured in a lodging house in the north of England.

However, the arrest of the man who looted the Bank of Liverpool did not by any means close the case.

Even before he was discovered, Frost had found out that Goudle had been in the habit of playing the races—patronizing a clique of "hand-book men," who had played upon his cupidity in such a manner that they, and not he, had secured the benefits of his dishonesty. In order to recover the money, Frost therefore had to round up the members of this gambling ring and force them to disgorge.

It developed that the leader of the organization, sensing a way in which to make a lot of money, without running any risk, had approached Goudle with an account of a "fixed race" which was to be run at Epsom Downs, and that the cashier, believing that he could clean up a fortune in a single day, had taken twenty-five thousand pounds from the bank, falsifying the accounts to conceal the shortage. The man's credulity is evident from the fact that he placed the money at odds of 20 to 1, which meant that he stood to win half a million pounds, or $2,500,000 if his horse came in first. Of course, no bookmaker could afford to pay a bet of this size—but Goudle overlooked this fact and cheerfully wagered his "borrowed" capital. The horse naturally failed to win, and, in an effort to recoup his losses, the cashier commenced systematically to loot the bank's funds.

One of the odd features of the case which Frost discovered, by blind luck, Goudle one day placed a big bet on a horse that won. When he went to collect his bet, with the firm intention of squaring his accounts with the bank, he was casually informed that the wager had not been placed in time, and he was advised to put it on another "sure tip," which lost. When his defalcations reached a point when it was hopeless to attempt further concealment from the bank authorities, Goudle "went out to lunch."

It didn't take Frost long to discover that, in planning a round-up of the gambling gang he was tackling one of the most difficult jobs of his career.

One by one Frost picked up the various threads of the tangled case. One by one he followed the various clues, at least one of which led to the suicide of a member of the book-makers' clique. But, in addition to seeing that Goudle was sent to prison for ten years, Frost secured evidence which forced the return of all but a small amount of money which had been taken from the Bank of Liverpool and placed upon horses, which, save in a single instance, had no chance whatever to win.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24 — German chemical manufacturers are "grabbing" the entire unexposed film industry of the United States according to a warning voiced today before the senate finance committee by H. C. Cole of Boston. Cole appeared during the hearing as spokesman for several large American film manufacturers. American patents have expired, and paved the way for foreign invasion, Cole said. It is becoming impossible for Americans to do business. Two big plants are closed now because of foreign competition. Films are now imported at the rate of 216,000,000 linear feet a year

Auto-Owning Country

WINNIPEG, MAN., Dec. 23. Canada stands second to the United States as the greatest automobile-owning nation in the world. The United States has 9,211,295 motor vehicles, or one to every eleven inhabitants, according to statistics. Canada has one to every twenty-one inhabitants; New Zealand one to forty-one, Australia, one to sixty-four; Cuba, one to ninety-four; British Isles, one to 110. Liberia, with one to every 250,000 people, is at the bottom of the list. The figures show that 83 per cent of the world's autos and motor trucks are in the United States. South Dakota leads the States in proportion to population, with one to every five persons, while the farming States generally average one to every ten persons. Canada, like the United States, has a large percentage of automobiles on farms. In Eastern Canada there are more in the cities, but in the prairie provinces farmers own considerably more. There are prosperous regions along the Canadian National Railways where 99 per cent of the farmers have automobiles, and in many other districts at least 75 per cent of the farmers at least 75 per cent of the farmers are now in common use on the farms throughout Western Canada.

True Detective Stories

THE SECRET OF HOLMEHURST

Copyright by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.

THE discovery of the body of B. F. Perry in his home at 1318 Callowhill street, Philadelphia, by a man who had come in to see about securing a patent, did not cause any sensation at the time, for the coroner's jury gave a speedy verdict of "death from accidental causes." There was clear evidence that some sort of an explosion had taken place. A shattered bottle which had manifestly contained some sort of inflammable material, a broken pipe filled with partly burned tobacco and a charred match, lay beside the body.

An autopsy showed that Perry had died from congestion of the lungs caused by the inhaling of flames or chloroform, the latter having presumably formed the contents of the broken bottle. So, as there were no claimants for the body and no estate, Perry's remains were interred in the Potter's field. There they would have remained undisturbed if it had not been for the evidence of a convict in the St. Louis prison.

Shortly after Perry's death, the Philadelphia branch of the Fidelity Insurance company received a letter from Jephtha D. Howe, an attorney in St. Louis, stating that "B. F. Perry" was really Benjamin F. Pitezel, who had carried a $10,000 life insurance with the Fidelity company. The only person who could be found to identify the body was a man named H. I. Holmes, of Wilmette, Ill., who willingly came to Philadelphia to superintend the exhuming of the body. Holmes and Howe met in the office of the company, presumably as strangers, and the former clearly identified the body of the dead man as that of his friend, Pitezel. Satisfied, the insurance company paid the insurance to Howe, Pitezel's attorney, and reimbursed Holmes for his expenses.

The details of the case were reported in the St. Louis newspapers, and a few days later, Marion Hedgspeth, a convict serving a sentence for train robbery, informed the governor of the prison that he would like to give him some information which he considered most important.

"If you will examine the records of the prison," said Hedgspeth, "you will find that there was a man here last summer by the name of H. I. Howard. He was in for fraud, I think, but was released on bail. While he was here, Howard asked me if I knew any lawyer whom I could recommend in connection with a swindling scheme which he had in mind—a plan which ought to net at least $10,000 without any trouble. He promised me $500 for my information and I gave him the lawyer's name, but I never got my five hundred."

"The name of the lawyer I recommended to 'Howard' was Jephtha D. Howe and 'Howard' is undoubtedly the man named Holmes who is mixed up with that insurance case in Philadelphia! The details of the case agree exactly with the scheme, as 'Howard' outlined it to me last summer."

As soon as this information reached Philadelphia, the insurance company, detailed an experienced detective named Geyer to arrest Holmes and to investigate his antecedents, for it was clear that Pitezel had not met his death through accident, but had been deliberately murdered. After a month's search, Holmes was traced to New England and finally arrested.

This, however, proved to be practically the beginning of the case for, the further back Geyer went into Holmes' history, the more gruesome details he discovered. In endeavoring to find out what had become of Mrs. Pitezel and her five children, Geyer found in the cellar of a house in Toronto—a house rented by Holmes under the name of Canning—the bodies of two children later identified as Alice and Etta Pitezel. From Toronto the trail led to Indianapolis, by way of Detroit and Cincinnati, and it was in Indianapolis that Geyer discovered the body of Howard Pitezel, aged ten, jammed into the chimney of the furnace in a house which had been rented some time before by a man who answered to the description of Holmes.

It was in the course of his search through Indiana and Illinois that Geyer came upon the most startling discovery of the entire case—the mysterious building in Chicago known as "Holmes' Castle" or "Holmehurst." The prisoner had personally superintended the erection of this structure and investigation proved that it contained an air-proof, sound-proof vault, communicating with the cellar by means of a secret staircase. Buried in the cellar floor and half-consumed by quicklime were found the remains of at least five persons who had been lured to Holmehurst and there murdered.

All of these crimes had been committed some time before the Pitezel affair, and had it not been for the fact that Holmes overlooked the promise which he had made to a convict in the St. Louis prison, it is quite possible that he would have remained at liberty, a constant and deadly peril to everyone with whom he came in contact.

But Detective Geyer returned to Philadelphia with more than enough evidence to secure conviction, and Holmes paid the penalty for his crime on the gallows.

Old general rumor has it that the Yankees are ready to give the Salt Lake club four players and a couple of shovelfuls of coin for Duffy Lewis, veteran outfielder and member of the famous Red Sox trio of Lewis, Speaker and Hooper for years. CHANUKAH WILL BE OBSERVED BY JEWS BEGINNING SUNDAY

Chanukah, a minor festival of the Synagogues, sometimes called the Feast of Lights, will be observed in Jewish circles beginning Sunday evening, December 25th, and for eight days thereafter.

With the Feast of Lights there is coupled an historical event, the Maccabean revolt which proved to be of supreme national importance to the people of Israel.

In the years 168 to 165 B. C. E., Antiochus Paphlagon, King of Syria, resorted to the crude method of compelling all his subject people to use one language and worship in one established and certified religious ceremonial, namely, the polytheistic ritualism of his model, the Greeks.

The enforcement of this royal decree was mandatory on all peoples including the Jews. In the Temple of Jerusalem Altars erected where idols were worshipped and Greek religious practices introduced.

The enforcement of these ceremonies, coupled with intense oppression, germinated hatred in the hearts of the Jewish people of Palestine which burst into a revolt and instantly led to war against the mad despot of Syria.

This insurrection was instigated by Mattathias, a priest of Modin, who rallied his countrymen around him and defied the King.

Sustained by his son Judah, called the Maccabee, and his four heroic brothers, the mighty armies of Syria were defeated after successive campaigns covering a period of four years.

The final victory of the Maccabean armies over all the hosts of Syria happened according to the Hebrew calendar on the 25th of Kislev, which corresponds to the month of December in the year 165 B. C. E. On this eventful day the various images and ritual paraphernalia brot into the Temple at Jerusalem were removed and the altar rededicated to the worship of the God of Israel.

WATTERSON'S BODY PLACED IN VAULT

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., Dec. 24.—The body of "Marse Henry" Waterson, has been placed in a vault in a Jacksonville cemetery where it will remain until next spring when it will be taken to a permanent resting place in Louisville, Ky.

The grand old man of journalism was laid to rest with simple service at which a Jacksonville Presbyterian minister officiated.

No public announcement of the time for the services had been made because of the family's desire for privacy.

The grief of Col. Waterson's widow also made the secret service necessary, her son, Henry L. Waterson, said.

BOLAND, ALIAS GARDNER

Copyright by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.

WHEN Hyman and Hess, dealers in cloaks and suits on State street, Albany, N. Y., sent a check for $38.77 to Reia and Blum, garment manufacturers in New York city, they didn't have the slightest idea that they were starting a chain of evidence which would land one of the cleverest crooks in America behind the bars.

A few days later, before the New York firm had had time to report the nonarrival of the check and thus permit Hyman and Hess to look into the matter, a young man came into the National Commercial bank in Albany and presented a check for $80, made out to "Bearer." The date on the check, filled in with a rubber stamp, corresponded to the day on which it was presented, and the man who handed it to the paying teller mentioned casually that the check "was to cover an option" and that he had to hurry back to New York in order to complete the transaction. The paying teller, feeling certain that the signature was genuine, cashed the check, and the man who had presented it walked out of the bank with $80 in his pocket.

When Hyman and Hess had their account balanced they found that they were exactly $380 short—for the original check had never reached its New York destination, but had been lifted out of the mail box by one of a gang of clever criminals, the body of the check erased with an ink eraser and the date and amount filled in on top of the original signature.

"Only one man in the country could have done that and gotten away with it," growled George A. Fuller, assistant superintendent of the Pinkerton Detective agency, when the bank called the details of the case to his attention. "It's Boland's work!"

"Yes, Boland," replied Fuller. "Or Gardner, as he sometimes calls himself. He's got a regular organization for this sort of thing. Trains boys to loot the mail boxes, washes the checks with an acid preparation of his own invention, writes in a higher amount, makes them payable to 'Bearer,' and then another of his tools cashes them."

"If you know so much about the man," asked the amazed banker, "why hasn't he been arrested long before this?"

"It's easy enough to arrest a man," was Fuller's reply, "but it is sometimes very difficult to convict him. So far as the actual check-raising goes, Boland plays a lone hand. What's more, he plays his men well, and takes care of them if they happen to get caught. So far, none of 'em has turned state's evidence, and until they do—or until we catch Boland red-handed—there's nothing to do but be careful. We've got our eyes on him. He can't move without our knowing it."

Warned by Hyman and Hess check that the Boland outfit was once more conducting operations in New York state, the Pinkerton man kept close watch on all persons suspected of belonging to the organizations, with the result that three men were arrested and sentenced to terms in prison. But all of them steadfastly refused to implicate the "man higher up."

Finally Boland and three of his associates were arrested in Boston, after Fuller had shadowed a boy whom he suspected of robbing a mail box. Dano, the boy, and Devine, another of the organization, drew short terms for petty larceny, but Boland escaped on account of a technicality, and moved to New York where he tried to continue his operations. But the New York police and particularly Commissioner George S. Dougherty, made things so difficult, that he was soon reduced to the expedient of securing checks wherever he could—a necessity which led to the fatal slip which Fuller had predicted.

Out of the mail box of an up-town apartment house, one of Boland's apprentices secured a check for $50, made out to a real estate company in payment of the rental for one of the apartments. It was child's play for Boland to wash off the original name and amount and to write in the words "Bearer" and "Two Hundred and Eleven Dollars." Once that was done he had a perfectly good check (apparently) and he sent one of his men down to the bank on which the check was drawn, with minute instructions as to the cashing of it. But the cashier, being suspicious of a check of that size being made out to "Bearer"—particularly as he knew that the woman whose signature appeared upon it was very careful in her financial dealings—declined to cash it, and Boland's man returned with a story of having been watched and therefore very fearful to approach the paying window.

Boland, in a spirit of bravado, again altered the check, this time making it out in the name of "William Harsh" and set forth to cash the check himself, something which he had never before attempted. One glance at the odd amount—$211—and the recollection that a check of similar size had been presented that morning, payable to "Bearer," was enough to convince the paying teller that something was wrong. The Pinkertons were immediately notified and Boland was caught, red-handed.

Fifteen minutes after his case came up in the County court in Brooklyn Boland was on his way to Sing Sing.

by remaining silent as to the vital issues involved, which endangers every other union in the movement, quite as much as it threatens the miners. But the Montreal and the Denver conventions of the Federation were not silent. At Denver, on June 23 last, the Federation adopted by unanimous vote a resolution offered under unanimous consent, which, "in harmony with our policy of opposing governmental interference with the fundamental rights of organized workers," reaffirmed the action taken at Montreal in 1920 "condemning the Industrial Court Law of Kansas and protesting against the financial support in the fight against it." The resolution further declared that—

"We commend the organized workers of Kansas, and particularly the miners workers and their officers, for that state upon whom the burden of the battle has fallen, for so bravely opposing unfair law in the face of injunctions and threats of imprisonment by hostile judges, thereby preventing this objectionable law from becoming operative in the state selected for this tentative experiment and thus fighting the battle for the organized workers of the country."

Under instructions of this character the Executive Council of the A. F. of L. is scarcely in a position to assist Lewis in further disruption of the labor movement in Illinois by condemning their generosity to the men and women in Kansas whose sacrifices Lewis has sought to nullify.

Quoting from Lewis' order to the Illinois miners that they cease to contribute their $1 monthly assessment to the Kansas strikers, and quoting Judge Anderson's injunction wherein it is provided that the U. M. W. of A. may not continue to send money to the strikers in West Virginia, Farrington says:

"By the above the Illinois miners are enjoined from feeding the Kansas miners, or to use the language of its framers, from in any manner whatsoever giving aid or comfort to the Kansas miners, which means that the Kansas miners must abandon their strike against the Industrial Court Act and return to the mines in humble submission or be left to starve on the cold, blizzard swept plains of Kansas. The worst injunction judge in the world could not have been more automatic or treated them more viciously. In God's name, where are we heading for?"

His announcement that Lewis' order declaring the assessment in aid of the Kansas miners to be illegal will be submitted to a referendum vote of the Illinois membership, is received here as evidence that the

DEBS NOT RESTORED TO CITIZENSHIP BY PRESIDENT'S ACTION

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—Executive clemency in the Debs case will not restore his citizenship it was learned today. Only a full presidential pardon could do that, and the administration was not prepared to grant that.

Along with the Socialist leader there will be freed nearly 25 other political prisoners now serving sentences of varying lengths for violations of wartime espionage laws.

The sentences in the other cases will be commuted to expire on Christmas day.

The president had under consideration 197 cases, apart from Debs' case, but final decision has been made in only about half of them.

There has been enormous pressure brought to bear on President Harding during the past six months for the release of Debs and the granting of general amnesty to all political prisoners. Almost equal pressure has been brought in opposition to this program.

Six weeks ago the matter was discussed at a cabinet meeting after which it was announced that the attorney general had been instructed to prepare a digest of all the cases for the consideration of the president. It was decided to include also the cases of soldiers serving sentences for violations of army regulations such as desertion after the armistice. There were 197 cases found which warranted executive clemency.

Debs was convicted of violation of the espionage act in September, 1918, as a result of a number of speeches he made in Ohio and West Virginia cities against the United States entering the war. He was sentenced to ten years by U. S. Judge David C. Westenhaver and, on appeal, the decision was sustained by the U. S. Supreme court on March 10, 1919, and Debs entered prison on April 13, 1919.

HONESTY IS THE BEST CHRISTMAS PRESENT FOR THIS FAMILY

Here's a chance for someone to distribute a little honesty and incidentally an abundance of Christmas cheer.

If you are able to avail yourself of the chance, you will make Christmas morning infinitely brighter for Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Skelton, and their family of six children, Wason-av.

While shopping for a few Christmas articles Friday, Mrs. Skelton lost a sum amounting to a little more than $50. The money belonged to her husband and represented his pay from the Clow company.

According to her story, Mrs. Skelton lost the money shortly after she had made a purchase in one of the stores.

"Any one who knows us," she said Friday, "will know how badly we need the money and just how much it means to us."

The family is in straitened circumstances, according to neighbors.

If found, the money may be brought to the Tribune or the finder may notify Mrs. Skelton thru Mary McNichols, Wason-av, whose telephone number is 627.

CHRISTMAS GOODIES CHEAPER THIS YEAR

Christmas candies and nuts of all kinds and oranges of the higher and lower grades are cheaper in price this Christmas than last year, according to local dealers.

According to one confectioner, candies that retailed from 40 to 50 cents per pound before the war and from 70 cents to 80 cents per pound last year, are selling at 35 cents to 40 cents per pound today. The pre-war box of chocolate candy at $1.50, now sells for $1.25, he said.

Nuts range in price from 25 cents to 40 cents per pound. English walnuts are the highest priced. They retail at 40 cents per pound.

Oranges are now selling at about 30 per cent cheaper than last year. They sell from 40 cents to 70 cents per dozen, the best grades. Last year's prices ranged from 60 cents to $1.00 per dozen.

WIFE TELLS OF

likely to profit him in a money way, he would wave a red flag with enthusiasm. In my opinion, he would do almost anything for gain."

Mrs. Lindenfeld's story of the 14 years as the wife of this Burns Detective Agency operative is the story of 14 years of privation and unhappiness. Here it is, practically in her own words:

"I married Wolf Lindenfeld," she said, "14 years ago. He is my first cousin. I had come to America two years before from Warsaw. From that time I have had to work very hard to support myself and my children—and sometimes him. I left him several times, the last time—about three years ago—for good. I have seen him only once since 1918."

"He has always been averse to work and he was away from me for long periods and never explained where he was or what he was doing. Sometimes when I was living with my children in one room, as I am doing now, and eating one meal a day so the children could have enough, he drove about town in an automobile."

"I do not know that he ever worked for detective agencies or anything like that, but he was such a liar that he could easily be a loud-mouthed revolutionist and a secret service agent at the same time. He lied about every thing."

The Lindenfeld children—Ruth, 14, and Fabian, 5—have not been told of their father's latest escapade, and will not be if their mother can help it, she declared.

Probably Burns and the interests which have bent their energies to fasten the blame for the Wall Street explosion upon "radicals" and the Third Internationale, could have picked no more thoroughly discredited and unprincipled person among all their "stool pigeons" for the job than Lindenfeld. The man's unscrupulousness and unreliability are illustrated in the fact that while in New York, on various occasions, he posed as Louis Waldman, Socialist ex-assemblyman, and at least once was exposed in this particular activity. His exploits in the labor and liberal movements were such that he became known here as a scamp who preyed upon everybody and everything he came in contact with.

He represented himself at Albany during sessions of the legislature to be representing a newspaper syndicate

RELEASE OF WAR PRISONERS ASKED BY LABOR UNION

NEW YORK, Dec. 24.—Forty thousand labor union locals in the United States have adopted resolutions calling upon President Harding to release all political prisoners, according to the New York World, which has joined the labor and liberal press in demanding that the men jailed for their opinions be freed.

The 40,000 locals represent practically the entire organized labor movement in America, both within and without the American Federation of Labor. With their appeals have gone resolutions and memorials for amnesty for political prisoners from hundreds of civic, social, educational and religious and political organizations.

The World publishes figures showing that during the year ending June 30, 1920, President Wilson, while refusing pardons for Eugene V. Debs and other political prisoners, granted 639 out of 664 applications in cases of prisoners confined for offenses against the Federal statutes. These included bank robbers, "white slavers," burglars, embezzlers, counterfeiters, moonshiners, sellers of colored oleomargarine, and a number of Germans convicted of "seditious utterances."

One of those pardoned by Wilson was the notorious Franz von Rinteln, a German spy who was three times convicted of conspiracy to blow up American and Allied ships, planting time bombs and fraudulently obtaining passports.

The port side super-structure of the ferry boat was torn away.

DOCTORS ARE NOT AGREED ON WHISKEY, WINES AND BEER

About Evenly Divided On Therapeutic Value of Whiskey—Few for Wines or Beer.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—Three thousand and sixty-three physicians in Indiana and Illinois, replying to the alcoholic liquor questionnaire sent to 53,000 doctors by the Journal of the American Medical Association, divided almost equally on the value of whiskey as a therapeutic agent; while a big majority declared they did not consider that wine and beer had any value in medicine.

The Journal in its issue of December 24 will announce the tabulation in these two states, the first in which the census has been completed.

In Illinois and Indiana combined 954 doctors declared they did not "regard whiskey as a necessary therapeutic agent in the practice of medicine," while 1,541 replied they did regard it of value. In Illinois alone, 1,149 physicians replied in the affirmative and 954 in the negative, but the Indiana returns reversed the combined total, 598 Hoosier doctors opposing whiskey and 362 favoring its use.

On the question of the medicinal value of beer, 855 doctors, 668 in Illinois and 187 in Indiana, believed it would be of value while 2,193 of whom 1,428 live in Illinois and 765 in Indiana, opposed it.

Wine as a medicine found 1,067 supporters, 504 in Illinois, and 563 in Indiana; while its opponents totalled 2,028; 74 being Hoosiers and 1,954

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—American machinery moved swiftly today to aid the starving millions of Russia.

"We start buying grain this afternoon," said Secretary of Commerce Hoover, and the first cargo of relief supplies will be moving in five days. Hoover made the announcement after a conference with President Harding, who only last night signed the bill which appropriated $20,000,000 for Russian relief.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—France's complete demands in the way of submarines and other auxiliary naval craft are understood to have reached Washington late this afternoon and are far in excess of that which the other powers are prepared to accept.

It was thought probable that the exact figures would be laid before the secret session of the powers, which got under way shortly after 3 o'clock.

A meeting of the American delegation was held just prior to the main session and later Secretary Hughes paid a hurried call to the white house, where he consulted the president.
